Tomorrow noon the chorus will appear in a body at the joint meeting of the Rotary and Kiwanis clubs.

Speaking of their recent performance in Akron, Ohio, The Times of that city says:

It was a great night for the Welsh people of Akron.

Many a heart in the large audience at the armory last night was carried back to Oldengroton, Aberdare, Carmarthen or some other home heard on that note, by the splendid offerings of the Rhondda Welsh Chorus.

It is not often that a group of individual artists are gathered together such a choir as that heard here last night. Those 16 male voices were blended together in perfect harmony and many passages in the various numbers took on the soft tonal qualities of a pipe organ.

PROTECTING FOREIGNERS FROM EXTORTION.

It is believed the affirmation by the Superior and State Supreme courts of the sentence imposed by the Fayette County Court upon former Justice of the Peace Garretts of Brewerville, found guilty on several charges of extortion, will have the salutary effect of helping to break up this practice, if it still exists, in this county.

It is a matter of more or less common knowledge that foreigners, ignorant of the intricacies of legal procedure, have, in years gone by, been summarily treated by a certain type of officers of the law. Consuls and other representatives of the foreign governments in this section have received numerous complaints from their countrymen residing here concerning the extortions fees and charges exacted of them when held before some of the subordinate courts of the county. While efforts have been made to punish some of the justiciable and constables alleged to be offenders in this respect, the trial and conviction of "Squire Garretts" is the most important case of its kind. He was indicted on a large number of counts, and, after a sharply contested trial of these cases, was found guilty on two counts.

An appeal was taken to the Superior and subsequently to the Supreme Court, by both of which the findings of the local court were affirmed. There was, therefore, a thorough test of all the issues involved in the case with the result that the defendant is required to undergo a sentence of nine months to the workhouse on each count. The provision was made by the court that if the defendant spent his time in singapor, he would be entitled to a full protection from whatever severe or dishonest practices as is given to the native born.

REDUCING FOREST FIRE HAZARDS.

The spring forest fire season being near at hand District Forester Beamer has given timely notice that conditions which tend to develop fires must be remedied, otherwise those persons who are responsible will be subject to summary conviction before a magistrate or justice of the peace.

Preventing forest fires having been advanced to this stage where the hazards of various kinds have been classified, the officials in charge of forest protection are now able to definitely locate these hazards. Under the law they are empowered to issue orders requiring their elimination. If these orders are not complied with the alternative of the officer is to make information against the offender. The penalty is a fine $100 or imprisonment in the county jail the fine to increase at the rate of $100 for each day there is neglect or refusal to abate the nuisance.

Most people know the extent of the damage done by forest fires each year, and that sometimes result in loss of life, ought to be willing to cooperate with the forest service in its efforts to prevent fires. This, rather than the desire to escape or imprisonment, should be the more compelling motive on part of those who can reduce the fire hazards if they simply act promptly with that end in view.

The common sense method of saving the state's dog-man sends word that he is coming to Latrobe shortly, to see to eliminate the last extent of the dog-law in being observed.

In allowing the public to know that he is coming to Latrobe shortly, he has informed the state official he is compelled to do so, in order to give the public a chance to square themselves with the law, in the matter of obtaining a license for their pets. When he comes, and if he finds dogs with the little brass tags affixed to their collars, the owners will not be able to offer ignorance as a reason for not being subjected to a fine.

It remains to be seen to what degree the dog-man will enforce the law which prohibits running-at-large upon the part of dogs.

This, probably, is the question in which most residents are interested. They don't care, as yet, whether dogs wear brass tags or not without but with the coming of spring and the time for making gardens as well as planting flowers and scrubbing walks—there is much concern as to how many dogs are going to be allowed to run at will over the same.

This nature of the law never has been enforced to the extent that many residents would like to have it, especially during the summer time.

Perhaps the state man may have something to say about this matter, when he arrives.

Ordered Out of Town.

After being assessed $6.22 fees and costs, Florence, Wright, alias Flo Anderson, of Cumberland, was given 24 hours to leave the town and never return, at a hearing before Justice of Peace C. B. Arden of Vanderblit, information brought about by Oliver Dillinger, charging her with "running a disorderly house." Complainant Jerry Ritneon served the warrant.

PHILOSOPHY.

This state's dog-man sends word that he is coming to Latrobe shortly, to see to eliminate the last extent of the dog-law in being observed.

In allowing the public to know that he is coming to Latrobe shortly, he has informed the state official

he is compelled to do so, in order to give the public a chance to square themselves with the law, in the matter of obtaining a license for their pets. When he comes, and if he finds dogs with the little brass tags affixed to their collars, the owners will not be able to offer ignorance as a reason for not being subjected to a fine.

It remains to be seen to what degree the dog-man will enforce the law which prohibits running-at-large upon the part of dogs.

This, probably, is the question in which most residents are interested. They don't care, as yet, whether dogs wear brass tags or not without but with the coming of spring and the time for making gardens as well as planting flowers and scrubbing walks—there is much concern as to how many dogs are going to be allowed to run at will over the same.

This nature of the law never has been enforced to the extent that many residents would like to have it, especially during the summer time.

Perhaps the state man may have something to say about this matter, when he arrives.

The black bows in the back give the logical mate to the black belt trimmed with rosebuds. Medium size required.

"A LITTLE TANLAC BRINGS GREAT RELIEF"

Mr. Philadelphia Salesman in Telling His Experience With the World's Greatest Tonic.

"A little Tanlac brings great relief; at least, that's the way I find it," recently remarked Harry W. Nummuker, 2313 North Smalley St., Philadelphia, for twenty years a salesman for the Pilgrim Laundry here.

"Some ten years ago I began having trouble with indigestion. After a time my stomach became so disorderly that I was forced to extreme care in eating and even then I had trouble. My appetite let up and I suffered such pain and distress that meat time because occasions for dread rather than pleasure.

"Finally my nerves went to pieces, seemed likely to be stronger, and I was fast declining every day. The change three bottles of Tanlac had made in my condition is astonishing. Already I can eat a hearty meal and experience no disagreeable after effects. I enjoy peaceful sleep and get up mornings feeling refreshed and fine. I am getting along so well on Tanlac that my wife has started taking it, too. There's nothing like it."

Tanlac is for sale by all good druggists. Accept no substitute. Over 40 million bottles sold.—Advertisement.

SEE here, Jack, you've got to help me out. You see, Jane, Ramona's crazy about writers, and all the people at her house that night were either aspiring young authors themselves, or now most of them famous ones. I was completely out of it, and when I heard her rave about this chap Felix Hanson, and none of the rest of them seemed to know him, why I just sat there stuff of saying I did, see? I thought it would kill me to tell her.

I never dreamed it would go any farther. But here's a letter from her today begging me to come up for Easter Sunday breakfast and bring my friend Felix Hanson. Now, what I want you to do is to pretend you're Ramona, and me and pretend you're Ramona, see? No one will ever know the difference. You will do me a favor if you'll do this fellow's job, and if any difficulty does arise, I'll see you through."

Jack—Hartford did not realize the suggestion with much enthusiasm, but several hours later as he left Simmons' room, the latter called after him, "Thanks, old man, you're a lamb," and immediately sat down to write off a note to Miss Ramona, accepting her invitation.

His excitement in the Ramona house, where he noted arrival, "Oh, mother, we're going to have everything just right." This, however, telling the great Felix Hanson, was so glad it happens to be Easter, too; we can get him to tell his famous Easter story. They say he tells it well. It seems it was the first time he had ever worn a frock coat. He was taking his host girl to church Easter morning, and the girls' mischievous young brother slipped an egg, which had been colored but not boiled, into the pocket at the tail of the coat. He never noticed it until he sat down. Then it was too late. Jane laughed. "Well, get him to tell that one."

Hartford, unashamed, told the famous young Felix Hanson was feeling a little warm. He pulled uncomfortably at his collar which seemed suddenly to have grown too tight. Arouse from him met the lovely Jane Ramona, smiling at him benignly over the gaily decorated breakfast table. He could easily understand why Bill Simmons would go to any length to help her good graces, but why had he to be the one left in for such a mess? If he were found out, what would this girl think of him anyway? It would make him too ridiculous for apology. And on the other hand, he decided to think of letting so delightful a creature pass out of his life with never an effort who her. And certainly if she were to sentence to believe him to be Felix Hanson, a married man, there was no chance of his ever declaring himself, or even allowing their acquaintances to proceed further. The whole thing was very silly. Damn Simmons anyway.

Jane leaned over the table, "Oh, Mr. Hanson, won't you tell us that perfectly screwing story about the Easter eggs?"

"Oh, that, that, yes, indeed," laughed Jack a little nervously. He looked quickly at Simmons for aid. There was no indication of intelligence on the laughing face of that gentleman, however, and for the moment Jack would willingly have killed his friend. But he would not be undone. His lively imagination came to his aid.

"You see," he began, "My mother wouldn't have me any eggs to color for Easter, so I went around to all the coops in the surrounding neighborhood and stole them. Mother didn't discover it until after I had them all dyed, and of course she was furious.

"Take them every one back and put them where you got them," she said. And I did. The next morning when the neighbors went to get their eggs and found them 'all colors, they believed their chickens were diseased. There was no end of trouble and alarm before they learned what really happened."

Simmons laughed loudly, but he was the only one present who did. Mrs.

Clock Feeds Poultry
Poultry can be supplied with grain automatically at any desired time by a feeder operated by an alarm clock. The apparatus counters the material in proper amounts over a 20-foot space, insuring the fowl sufficient exercise in gathering it. A switch attachment can also be made to turn electric lights on and off without interfering with the feeding mechanism. The device can be hung to the ceiling of a coop or placed over a yard, and is designed to do away with much of the care required from attendants. It is claimed that it can be filled and set for work in a few minutes. — Popular Mechanics Magazine

Hard Work Done the Easy Way

American invention and enterprise have done much to take the hard toll and drudgery out of house work, as well as to provide many conveniences that add to the comfort and happiness of the home. Most all the hard tasks of housekeeping can be avoided or made far less arduous by modern appliances. To lighten the burden is to provide more opportunity for enjoying life.

Here are only a few of the items that are now almost indispensable in many homes:

- Vacuum Sweepers
- Washing Machines—Electric or Water Power
- Electric Irons
- Gas Irons
- Sewing Machines—with or without motor
- Bread Mixers
- Electric Cookers
- Kitchen Cabinets
- Moder Stoves
- A host of kitchen and household utensils

Our stores can supply anything in the above lines. Ask one of our salesmen about them. The cost of this modern equipment, we believe, is less than you realize.

The Paramount

"MODERN MATRIMONY" showing today and tomorrow at the Paramount presents Owen Moore and Alice Lake in the leading roles. The story is almost entirely comedy and it is comedy of the most acceptable type in that it is what is usually termed "strung-out comedy." It is a rare blending of both, with just a dash of pathos and drama to keep changingly season the whole. The two principals are cast as Chester and Patricia Waddington, who in the opening scene are discovered in the back parlor of a country domicile, just repeating the fatal words. The family bank account is noticeable by its absence, and all they have in the way of capital with which to finance their matrimonial venture is a check for commission earned by Chester in excess of his salary. His job isn't much to get excited about, and the salary could hardly be dignified by the name, but Chester has ambitions and youth and thinks the future will take care of itself. They purchase of a home and some furniture on the instalment plan and they are just comfortably settled when things go awry. Troubles in plenty crowd in until poor Chester is in the deepest slough of despondency. The picture amusingly presents these troubles and moves on to a bit of unexpected finale.

Friday and Saturday After a Million will be shown.

The Soisson

"ON THE BANKS OF THE WABASH"—The leading attraction today at the Soisson is a picture of backwoods life gone one word to misery. "On the Banks of the Wabash" is based on the famous song classic written by Paul Dresser.

The picture, produced by J. Stuart Blackton, deals with Indiana and Indian folk who live along the banks of the famous river. The story concerns about a fine old character, "Cap Hammond, quaint in humor, strong in manhood, who rises to an emergency and provides the thrill of the picture, a climax startling in its immensity.

"There is no song which so touches the heart of the man or woman who has wandered from the old home on the banks of the Wabash," Mr. Blackton explains. "I choose it because it has that universal appeal; there is no other thing in man's life which he retains so steadfastly and which is so enduring as his love of home."

"Indiana" is a state of homes. Sturdy people settled in that great state, people who lived wholesome lives, who lived close to the soil. The pioneers who hewed their way through the virgin forests of the Wabash valley, and who cleared timberland that they might grow food products, have left a posterity that probably is better to real America than any other community in our great United States.

Thursday, Friday and Saturday, Johnny Hines will be seen in "Little Johnny Jones."

The Orpheum

"ANNA CHRISTIE" on view today at the Orpheum was adapted from the remarkable stage success and presented on the screen by Thomas H. Ince. Mr. Ince has broken every precedent in his latest production, "Anna Christie" instead of the usual balanced cast of characters presented in a screen story, only one other woman appears in the film besides Blanche Sweet, who plays the title role. By using only two women in this story, in contrast to a background of surging masculine life, Ince has presented one of the most remarkable studies ever made on the screen of a woman—and a woman of the unconventional type. Sailors, dry men, street wonders, wharf "trails," shuffling Chinamen, coal-blackened smokers from the picturesque ensemble of masculine life, against which the dramatic story of "Anna" is unfolded. Three principal characters are involved in this drama of a girl who fights her old life for life itself against masculine opposition. "Women they're all alike—and Gawd, how I hate them all," is the cry of "Anna," who has been the victim first of her father's brutal disregard to assume parental responsibility and look after his daughter's welfare; next of the brutality of four cousins of the northwest; then of men, men, until she comes to hate them with a deadly loathing. When finally a great love comes to her and she is forced to tell her father and her sweetheart the story of her past life—one of the most powerful situations ever worked out on the screen is presented.

Thursday, Friday and Saturday William S. Hart will be seen in "Slinger Jim."

The operetta is under the direction of five of the township school teachers.

Mr. Major H. Witt and H.

CHAPTER XVIII

Transley, returning by an earlier train than he had expected, found Sarah at the house and Wilson engaged in dialogue with the family pig. The lad, on hearing the motor, rushed to his father's arms and cried, "Well, well, what a big boy you are!" Transley, swinging him up to his shoulders, "And how is the pig? And how is your friend Grant?"

"Mother hasn't let me go to see him lately. I don't know why. Ever since the night I slept at his house—"

"The day you went away. And mother was there in the morning—"

"Wilson, where is your mother?"

"I don't know, daddy."

He strode sharply toward the house.

"Sarah, where is Mrs. Transley?"

"I don't know, sir," said the maid. Then, frightened out of her reticence by her master's unusual severity—"I think she has gone to the old quarry, sir. She often goes up there of an afternoon."

"A trying place!" Transley gasped furiously. He dropped the boy and, in his room, found a revolver and cartridges. A moment later he was striding in after many steps down the narrow road. Wilson, puffed by the sudden interruption of his father's greeting, followed at a discreet distance.

"I've suspected—I've suspected," Transley was ringing as he walked. "I've suspected—more than I've said. Give 'em enough rope. That's my plan. And now they've taken it. By God, if they have!"

With every step the wrath and horror within him grew. He was at the quarry before he knew it. He paused for a moment to listen. Yes, there were people present. There were sounds—God, it sounded like fight!

Transley rushed in. A man and a woman were reeling in each other's arms. "I hate you! I hate you!" the woman was crying. "You coward!" You coward! The woman was his wife. The man was not Dennison Grant.

Although Transley had a revolver in his pocket, it was not his customary weapon, and his thought did not turn naturally to it. In this tremendous moment he forgot it altogether. He rushed upon his wife's assailant, clutching him about the throat.

The blow Transley landed in Drask's face sent that gentleman spinning like a top. At the top, too, Drask wobbled at the edge of the precipice, and dropped out of sight.

Grant fell on his knees beside the stricken Transley, leaned over, catching the quivering form in his arms. Zen, beside him, drew the sorely mangled hand to her breast and whispered words of endearment into ears soon closing to all mortal sounds.

Presently Transley opened his eyes.

As they swam in each other's arms, crushing, choking, clutching at each other's throats, it was slowly forced home upon Transley that he was a losing fight. His assailant had the strength, and, after a hesitating moment of surprise, the ferocity of a lion. He had broken Transley's first strip of advantage about his throat and seemed in momentary prospect of reversing the situation. There were no talk, no cries, no oaths; it was a silent fight save the grunting and groaning which became more and more labored as the combatants drew on. In their clutch, Drask's stabbled face rubbed into Transley's well-groomed cheek; his snarling teeth clapped, but indeed, at Transley's jaw.

Then it was that Transley remembered his revolver. Breaking Drask's grip by a superhuman effort, he drew the weapon and fired. The shot went wild, and the next instant Drask was upon him again. In the struggle the revolver fell from Transley's hand, and both men began fighting toward it. As Drask's fingers clinched it Transley kicked his foot from under him, and the two went down together. Rolling about on the rocky floor of the quarry, they approached, slowly, unconsciously, the edge of the precipice that led away to the river.

On the very edge Transley realized his new and hideous danger, and the strength of a madman flung Zen to the ground, where she fell unconscious at his feet. Then he tore himself free from Transley's grip about his throat. The next moment the two men were swaying about in a struggle of death.

The next afternoon Zen appeared at the gate with horses saddled for two. "Come, Denny, we are going for a ride," she announced, "and in a few minutes our mounts were paddling down the trail which led over the foot-hills to the South Y.D.

Zen was strangely silent upon their ride, and Grant, after futile attempts to engage her in conversation, was about to ride at his side and inquire her homesickness and her beauty. Her strangely unresponsive; she seemed to Grant wholly as adorable as on that day of her unspoken confession when they had met at the ford. Soon she must speak! Well, he had waited; he still could wait.

They followed the trail, little changed by the passage of years, down the slopes to the South Y.D. They forded the river, and Zen swung her horse about in the grove of cottonwoods.

"You remember this spot, Denny?" she asked. "It is where we first met."

"I remember," he said. "No, he would not be tempted into a demotion. She must lead."

The sun was gliding the mountain tops with gold, and gilding, too, Zen's face and hair with beauty ineffable. For a moment she sat in the silent light like a statue, beamed with an instant of joy and life; then fell. She spurred her horse to a gallop and galloped ahead up the valley.

with him. Drask realized it, too, and gleefully, fiendishly joined again in the combat, deliberately forcing the fight toward the river.

"I've got you, Transley!" he hissed, speaking for the first time since Transley's fingers had clutched about his throat; "I've got you, and you're going over there—with me. Zen tried to drown me once; now I'll drown you. I'm sick of you. I've got you, Transley!"

"Duck!" Transley exclaimed, a light of recognition breaking upon him.

"You're mad, Drask, mad!" Transley cried. "Why?"

But at that moment Drask, by a sudden contortion, whipped a knife from his pocket. Transley felt its sting—once, twice, three times; then darkness fell. Zen, recovering from her stun, sat up in time to see her husband staggering in the arms of Drask.

Half a mile away Dennison Grant had been busily plowing up and down his prairie field when he suddenly saw Wilson approaching at his topmost speed. Since the night of the storm he had missed the boy tremendously; sometimes he had thought that it only might have been a dream. He had seen Zen, he knew, at Wilson's visits, and he bore Zen no ill will; but he felt that she understood her motives. But now, as the boy came racing toward him, Grant felt his heart bounding about in an extraordinary manner.

"Well, well, what a big boy you are!" Transley, swinging him up to his shoulders, "And how is the pig? And how is your friend Grant?"

"Mother hasn't let me go to see him lately. I don't know why. Ever since the night I slept at his house—"

"You slept at his house? When?"

"The day you went away. And mother was there in the morning—"

"Wilson, where is your mother?"

"I don't know, daddy."

He strode sharply toward the house.

"Sarah, where is Mrs. Transley?"

"I don't know, sir," said the maid.

Then, frightened out of her reticence by her master's unusual severity—"I think she has gone to the old quarry, sir. She often goes up there of an afternoon."

"A trying place!" Transley gasped furiously. He dropped the boy and, in his room, found a revolver and cartridges.
